By upholding Ahimsa as the highest virtue, A Jain merchant shown the world that “true heroism is not just about wielding a sword, but about standing tall in moments of deep moral crisis”.

It's a story of a man who sold everything he had—his land, his house, and his family's wealth to arrange the amount required to purchase the costliest piece of land on this earth.

And that too not for himself, not for his family, not even for people of his caste but for the dignity of those who stood up for the protection of dharma.

In December of 1705 at Sirhind, Mughals refused to release the bodies of Sahibzada Zorawar Singh, Sahibzada Fateh Singh & Mata Gujri for a proper funeral.

To break the spirit of sikhs, Mughals set an impossible demand that the land for the cremation could only be bought with the gold coins covering the exact area on which the bodies would lie.

But when they heard that there is a someone who is ready to release the bodies & to buy that land at any cost, Mughals got annoyed and modified their condition that to buy the land instead of laying down the coins, cover the area by the gold coins in standing position.

Mughals did not know that their oppression cannot stand against this man's selflessness, bravery, and his commitment to unshakable faith.
